RUBÉN TORRES

Modèle au repos dans un fauteuil, 1965

Aquatint and etching printed on Auvergne paper, a high-quality French paper.

Context

This print belongs to Picasso's prolific late graphic period of the 1960s, when printmaking became one of his primary fields of experimentation. By 1965, Picasso was living in Mougins in the South of France and working closely with the master printers Piero and Aldo Crommelynck, whose technical collaboration allowed him to push etching and aquatint to remarkable expressive limits.

About the Subject

The theme of the reclining model is central to Picasso's late work. During this period, he frequently explored:

- The intimate relationship between artist and model
- The reinterpretation of Old Master traditions (Rembrandt, Velázquez, Goya)
- The female figure as both muse and formal structure

This work combines:

Etching (eau-forte): for the linear drawing

Aquatint: to create tonal areas and depth

Picasso used aquatint in highly painterly ways during the 1960s, achieving rich blacks and
