RUBÉN TORRES

Head of a Bearded Man (1966) by Pablo Picasso is an original aquatint created on vellum paper as part of the frontispiece for the edition Papiers collés (1910–1914). Published in Paris by Au Pont des Arts with a preface by Jean Cassou, the work belongs to a limited edition of 100.

Although created in 1966, the piece reflects Picasso's retrospective dialogue with his earlier Cubist period (1910–1914). The composition distills the human figure into bold, structural forms, exploring fragmentation and reconstruction of identity. Through the aquatint technique, Picasso achieves a rich tonal depth that reinforces the expressive intensity of the portrait, turning it into both a homage to and reinterpretation of his own artistic legacy.
