Hommage a Joan Miró, 1973

Joan Miró

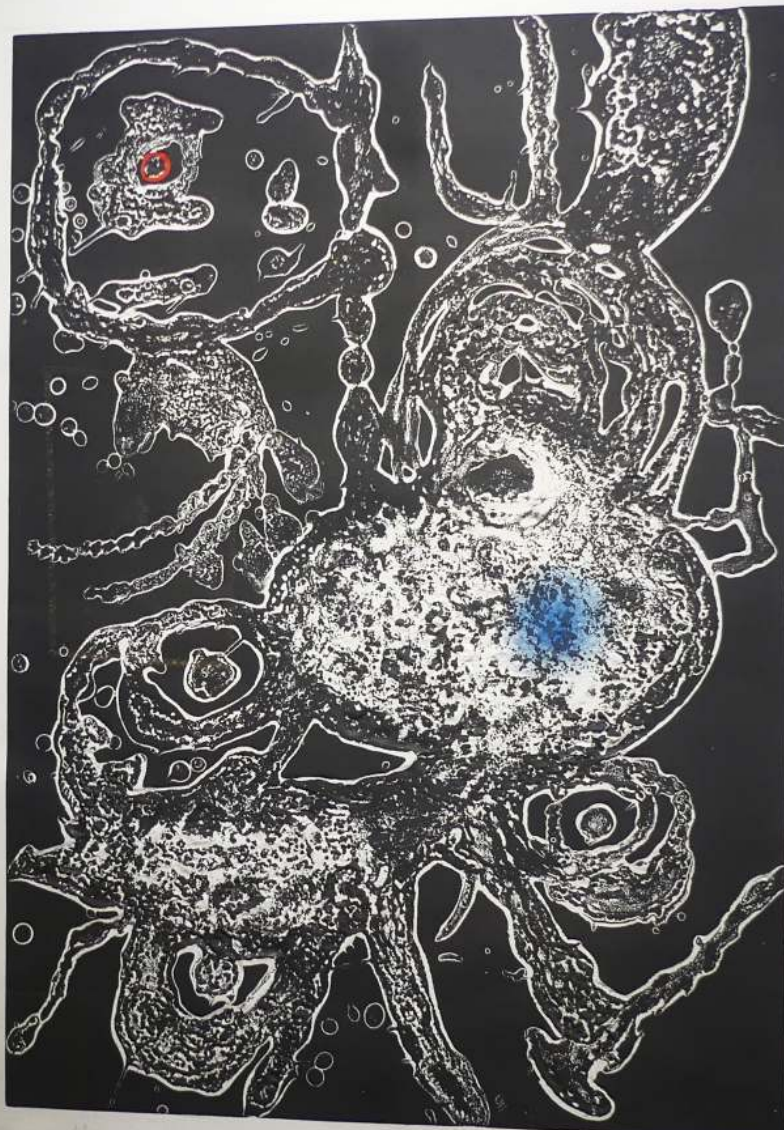

Cardinalis (bird)

"Hommage à Joan Miró" (1973) stands out in Miró's late graphic production for its technical sophistication and expressive visual intensity. The composition features organic signs, vibrant color spots, and delicate lines over a spacious background, combining etching and carborundum. Etching provides precise, controlled lines, while carborundum introduces rough, dense textures that give the work a near three-dimensional quality, reflecting Miró's enduring interest in exploring the materiality and expressive potential of printmaking. The edition was printed by J.J. Torralba under the supervision of Sala Gaspar, ensuring fidelity of texture and color across each sheet.

This print is part of a series created to commemorate the artist's 80th birthday, with hors-commerce (H.C.) editions reserved for close friends and collaborators. Each copy, including ours inscribed with "Cordialment", embodies a personal and intimate gesture, transforming the print into a unique object that unites artistic mastery with private significance. Beyond its commemorative purpose, the series illustrates the role of printmaking as Miró's creative laboratory, where he could experiment with signs, color, and composition, reaffirming his position as a central figure in 20th-century art, whose visual language turns the everyday into a universal, poetic realm.
